

Rupert Goodwins

Editor, ZDNet UK

Rupert Goodwins is editor of ZDNet UK. Combining two of the fastest-changing sectors in business, IT and the media, he keeps an eye on the team as they deliver news, comment, reviews and analysis to the millions of community members formerly known as readers.

His particular interests include chip design, networks, wireless, operating systems and emerging technology. Before becoming editor in 2008, Rupert worked as technology and technical editor on PC Magazine, IT Week and ZDNet, as well as being a contributor to a wide range of national newspapers and other magazines. He's a frequent guest on TV and radio, usually at an unearthly hour, most recently consultant and contributor to Radio 4's new IT series, Click On. Before becoming a full-time journalist, he was a software and hardware engineer for a range of companies including Sinclair, Amstrad and Marconi Space and Defence. One of his projects is in the NSA and Bletchley Park museum collections: if he said any more, he'd have to bore you to death.

His hobbies include reading and writing fiction, amateur radio, and unlistenable music.

About ZDNet UK

ZDNet UK (www.zdnet.co.uk) is the most advanced website for technology decision makers who need complete coverage of business technology. The website takes the principles of web 2.0 and applies them to the business environment to give our members personal control over their experience. It brings a new look, features and functionality to enable IT professionals to interact with and get the advice of their peers, build their own social network, connect with vendors, and collaboratively solve operational and strategic business technology problems on their terms.

In addition, our experienced team of editorial specialists continues to deliver news, analysis and interpretation of the ever-changing IT environment and how technology impacts business today - providing the trusted, independent, authoritative content that has made ZDNet.co.uk the first stop for everyone in IT.
